CALL FOR PAPERS
Theme: Online Allied Health Education

Allied Health is not a new-comer to online education. Yet, it has faced challenges due to COVID that include accessing labs, SIMs, and clinical placements. Students have faced further challenges specific to learning approaches for successful telehealth appointments and addressing factors for successful engagement in online clinical placements. For an upcoming issue, IJOIE is accepting topics on the following themes:

- Exploring the challenges – and opportunities – of Allied Health education in the online environment;
- Accessible apps and SIMs for supporting student learning;
- Addressing key student learning items for effective telehealth experiences;
- Online clinical placement;
- Innovative teaching approaches for engaging allied health students;
- Accessing labs from off-campus; and
- Other relevant areas to support innovations in online allied health education

About IJOIE
Publications in IJIOE focus on the "big blue sky" questions in online education: What are those innovative practices happening in our online classes? and What new software tools assist our students in supporting their learning online? These are just a couple of big questions that are necessary as society continues to use online education, especially in our COVID environment. We have 12 discipline streams represented in our journal is published four times a year: STEM; Artificial Intelligence; Online Innovation in the Secondary Space; Immersive Online Education; Course Design and Development; Computer Systems and Software Development; Visual and Performing Arts; Adaptive and Personalized Learning; Scholarship of online Teaching and Learning (SOTL); Economics, Business and Workplace Training; Allied Health; and Online Assessments. The journal publishes critical and timely articles on innovation in online education that are 5,000 to 6,000 words in length.

Submission Deadline: April 20, or through the ongoing open calls for papers
Full manuscripts should be 5,00 to 6,000 words in length. Longer articles are considered on a case-by-case basis.
